

The 1887 US Coast Survey T-sheet of "La Ballona Lagoon" shows a barrier beach, dunes, and wetland habitat patterns. Within a broad area of tidal marsh (shown with repeating small tufts), we see a substantial amount of open water habitat and several apparently dry, seasonal pannes. These habitat patterns varied along the Southern California coast, indicating differences in the controlling physical factors and suggesting local design targets for restoration.